NOTE

I HAVE been encouraged to hope that the letters and documents here published as a supplement to the History of Clare may afford pleasure and information to many members of the College and others who are interested in the study of University manners and customs. Some of these letters are of a strictly personal nature, and owe their interest to the light which they shed upon the actions and characters of various prominent members of the Society at different periods. Others will serve to illustrate the times in which the lives of our predecessors here were cast. Here we see Cromwell, at the height of his power, renewing his lease with the College, and expressing to Tillotson his hope that his landlords will "use him as they do their other Tenants"; there the future Archbishop tells us of the death of the Lord Protector. Or we may pass over a few years and come to the letters written during the autumn of 1665 (the year of the great plague), when undergraduates were not permitted to return to Cambridge, and the Fellows themselves were locked in the College for fear of infection. If we may identify the "small thackt house at hogsden," where S. Herne saw the unhappy victims of the pestilence lying almost starved for want of help, with the familiar "Thatched-house" in Hodsden where Venator proposed to drink his morning's draught, then we have here a melancholy foil to the picture of that "fine, fresh, May morning" in Walton's immortal book.

Again, in the riot at Oxford in 1683 we have a graphic illustration of the turbulence of the times, the popular hatred of the Duke of York and the enthusiasm for the ill-fated Monmouth.

Elsewhere we note the arbitrary interference of the "Association" in putting down ritualistic practices in the College, and in ordering the Master and Fellows to celebrate Round-head victories with "exceedings at dinner and a bonefire in the evening"; or, again, the reverse picture of ejected Fellows coming back to their old College with the Restoration of the Monarchy. Nor can we fail to be struck by the extent to which outside influence was brought to bear upon strictly domestic matters, such as the elections to Fellowships. To those familiar with the name of Bishop Pearson only as the author of a learned work upon the Creed he will here appear in an unexpected character as one "whose greatest concerne as to this world is the care of his numerous relations."

But it is needless to dwell upon these and similar details. The letters themselves (and herein lies their value) will invest the collegiate life of the seventeenth and early eighteenth centuries with a picturesqueness and a reality which no modern description of it could convey. And it is with the object of presenting these letters in as vivid a setting as possible that the volume has been illustrated by reproductions of portraits in the Hall and Combination Room, and facsimiles of the signatures of some of those to whom Clare is most indebted for its reputation and its prosperity.

Whatever may be thought of the Editor's share in the production of this book, there can be no difference of opinion as to the admirable manner in which his collaborators, the artists, the printer, and the publishers, have done their part in rendering the volume as attractive as possible.

INTRODUCTION.

Relation to Grace Book Γ.

THE second part of 'Grace Book B' continues the annual accounts of the proctors for the years 1511—1544. As has been explained in the preface to the first part, the present volume includes only one section of the proctors' record, the other section, containing the graces, being included in 'Grace Book Γ.' The accounts are accompanied by tables of degrees for each year except 1542–3; for that year Grace Book B gives the accounts only, without the degrees. The severance of the graces from the accounts is also not perfectly methodical. A few graces, for which no payment was made, continue to be entered in an irregular way on the pages of Grace Book B (see for instance, pp. 118, 139, 140).

Character of the volume.

The entries are in several hands, and the arrangement of the volume is far from systematic; expenses and receipts, cautions, tables of degrees, accounts of particular benefactions, are grouped together, but in no regular order. The tables of degrees are confusedly arranged, the titles of the several groups are varied, the headings are in some cases omitted altogether, and the lists are broken up to suit the exigencies of space, so that it is difficult in some cases to determine under what title each list should come. Sometimes the order of seniority is followed in the lists of B.A.'s and M.A.'s, sometimes it is neglected (pp. 104, 163).

Cautions.

The accounts cease to be of interest as bibliographical records, for the practice of depositing a book by way of caution had been discontinued (books on paper not being accepted[1]), and the cautions named are astrolabes and pieces of plate or jewellery.

Character of the accounts.

On the other hand the accounts are those of the period of the Henrician reformation, a period which even the narrow vision of proctorial accountants cannot render dull. The most tedious financial details which show the University, treating on the one part with Henry VIII, Wolsey and Cromwell, and on the other with enraged and excommunicated Mayors and bailiffs, acquire a vividness, a brilliancy of colour, which is not characteristic of the accounts of a more peaceful time. The proceedings of Henry VIII were so ordered as to derange the most methodical accountant's mechanical observance of set rules. The injunctions of 1535, which prohibited the academic study of the canon law, changed abruptly the character of the University tables of degrees, and with like suddenness the titles 'friar' and 'monk' drop from our pages after 1539. A table of the degrees given in each year has been appended: it is compiled from the lists in this Grace Book, lists which evidently are by no means complete. But in spite of the incompleteness of the statistics, there is enough evidence to show that the changes of the Henrician reformation worked unfavourably for the University in reducing the number of candidates for degrees.

Finance. The immediate effect of the events of the years 1530–40 was to reduce the balance of the University chest to a dangerously low ebb. In the quiet years 1512–32 the finances of the University had flourished, expenses had averaged £28, receipts £47, and in 1533 the chest had a total balance of £275, not counting Cardinal Bourchier's bequest of £100, received in 1513 (pp. 10, 11) and kept in a separate sack. But after 1533 expenses rose and receipts declined. The number of degrees fell from an average of 93 during 1522–33 to an average of 78 in 1534–44. The heavy outlay on legal expenses, incurred 1532–3 in fighting the town, began the University's financial embarrassment just at the time when it was least able to meet the usual claims. In 1544 the proctors passed to their successors an empty chest[1], with a small deficit. The five regius professorships, which came to the University as the result of the dissolution of the monasteries, do not appear in the present accounts, where the dissolution makes itself felt as a cause of increased expense rather than of increased endowment. To preserve the annual grant of £10, paid by Westminster Abbey in return for the celebration of Henry VII's exequies, £50 was spent (p. 247); the decrees of the Court of Augmentation, which confirmed the old grants to the Lady Margaret preacher and divinity reader, are also mentioned, together with the sum spent from the Fen and Neal Chests (£20) towards the cost of the purchase of the advowson of the Rectory of Burwell St Mary from the Chancellor of the Court of Augmentations[1].

The University 'Maecenases' (pp. 76, 83), friends, benefactors and their wives, appear here also as items of expense rather than of receipt. The Lyncke and St John's chests are named, and may be added to those mentioned in Mr J. W. Clark's history of the University Endowments[2]. An exhibition was also given by Dr Wolman, a sum of £43. 6*s.* 8*d.* (p. 218). The first recipient seems to have been Williams, Dr Wolman's chaplain, whose stipend is repeatedly named.

The benefaction of Dr Thomas Barrow (1496), tenements for whose rent the chaplain of the University annually rendered account, became also a source of expense, as the houses fell into disrepair. John Ostaby's detailed accounts end in 1519–20; after that the Barrow account is only occasionally alluded to by name, the account being summarized (pp. 147, 160).

Relations with the town.

The accounts contain numerous traces of the recurrent conflicts between the authorities of the University and the town. The first two years 1512–3 are marked by numerous entries of expenses incurred in connexion with the excommunication of Robert Smith, a town-bailiff. His suit it was, presumably, that necessitated the copying of the papal bulls (pp. 1, 2) conferring jurisdiction on the University authorities, for it was these privileges which he was accused of infringing when he opposed the bedell Bracebridge (p. 11). His own counter-step had been to bring a writ of praemunire against the University[3]. It was for this excommunication that letters significatory (p. 11) were written. The next ten years were quiet, broken however by plague, 1513–4 (p. 29), by flood, Nov. 4, 1519 (p. 78), by a fire in the Terence schools, 1528–9 (p. 68), by visits from Wolsey in the summer of 1520 (p. 82), from Queen Katherine in the autumn of that year (p. 88), from King Henry Oct. 16, 1522[4] (p. 108).

Similarity of the Oxford

The beginning and end of a period of ten years' conflict of a more than usually bitter kind between the University and the town syn-

chronises with a period of similar conflict at Oxford. The Oxford disturbances were due to the royal letters patent of 1 Apr., 1523, obtained through Wolsey's influence, in reward for a complete submission. Wolsey received absolute power over the University statutes, and the University received in return a great increase of chartered privileges which materially altered the relations of the town to the scholars and all who could register as privileged persons. The charter enfranchised the University so liberally, that a desire for a similar grant could not fail to be felt at Cambridge, and on 24 Apr., 1524, Cambridge submitted its statutes to Wolsey, following the example of Oxford. The terms, in which this action is described in this volume (p. 114), seem to hint that it was not by the writer approved. No charter of liberties was received in exchange, none at all events is enrolled among the patents. "One that did emblaze my lord Cardinal's arms upon our letters of liberties" was paid upon this account (p. 116), but it does not appear that the letters contained new franchises.

One favour which was obtained through Wolsey was a judicial modification[1] of some of the clauses of Fisher's award of 1501, an arbitration which for some twenty-five years had worked fairly satisfactorily for University and town. The new orders of Wolsey were more liberal to the University, and it does not appear that the legal grounds of the new award were stated. Whereas Fisher's award had given the Mayor jurisdiction over disputes concerning contracts of victual bought for consumption, when both parties were burgesses or when a burgess was plaintiff, Wolsey gave all such pleas to the University if either party could claim University privilege. He also forbade the borough officers to take any payment for licensing victuallers, who thus enjoyed the freedom of retailing in the borough without entering the Merchant Gild. At Oxford, Wolsey's charter had exempted persons enjoying University privilege from all contributions and payments for the borough franchise due to the town authorities, and this evasion of the old borough control of retail traders was bitterly resented by the town.

University jurisdiction.

Although the University obtained through Wolsey no 'great charter' of new franchises such as Oxford received, there is some evidence that the opportunity was taken to proceed upon lines similar to those adopted at Oxford. If Cooper's Cambridge Annals and the University accounts be read concurrently with Turner's

[1] Cooper, Annals, I. p. 324; he gives the date 'about 1526.'

Records of the City of Oxford, it will be seen that there is a striking similarity in the proceedings taken by the University and the town parties at the several stages of the conflict. The Oxford charter[1] granted to the Chancellor and his deputies full criminal jurisdiction over all cases in which either party was able to claim University privilege; the University civil jurisdiction was only less complete, inasmuch as suits concerning freehold were saved for the royal courts. The jurisdiction of the University, civil and criminal, might be exercised either according to the law of the realm or according to University custom, and the complaints of the town make it clear that the custom of both Universities[2] was to use Roman law. In the Oxford charter the clauses granting view of frank-pledge with fresh powers seem to have infused new life into the court, which the University had always held to enforce its assizes of victual; and the two 'law-days' or leets, which the Vice-Chancellor proposed to hold annually after the grants of the new charter, excited much opposition. At Cambridge the resuscitation of a court leet (with the accompanying payment of £10 to the Exchequer) and of the demand for a mayoral oath, which seems to have been allowed to lapse, was possibly due to imitation. In any case the 'leet' begins to figure upon the accounts (pp. 199, 205 and later), where it was not represented in former years; and there was strong opposition in the town to a court and an oath which appear to have been regarded as novelties or objectionable revivals of lapsed custom[3]. At both Oxford and Cambridge the University claim to banish burgesses[4] was regarded by the town as something new, at Oxford as an outcome of the new grants. Both Universities resorted more frequently than of old to the use of excommunication, and in both the exercise of control over municipal trade was more energetic than hitherto.

Payments in the accounts for dis-

The character of the new disputes will be best shown by taking the entries upon the University accounts in chronological order. In the light of the information given in Cooper's Annals, the

[1] It is printed in full in Registrum Privileg. Alm. Univ. Oxon. 1770. The abstract in Turner, from Twyne's MS., is incorrect in detail and incomplete. It is unfortunate that this charter has not been included in Ogle's Royal Letters addressed to the City of Oxford.

accountant's brief and allusive entries become intelligible. The first entry (p. 113, 1524) concerns the indictment of the junior proctor John Briganden, on inquest, for the death of David Vaughan. At Oxford, under the new charter, such a case lay within the University jurisdiction. Not so, however, at Cambridge; there the accountant contented himself with a brief statement of the circumstances of the conflict as seen from the junior proctor's point of view. The entries in the town accounts which are given in Cooper's Annals (I. 310) give the opposite point of view. The final decision is not known, nor the circumstances of an appeal from the bailiff Slegge in the case of one John Noke (p. 117). But in the same year (pp. 118–9) there are recorded the costs of making public the submission of the Mayor, George Foster, and his story is known. He had refused to appear at the command of the Deputy Vice-Chancellor to take order for the assize of bread and ale, being busy (as he alleged) with matters concerning the town. It was not clear that the University's charter gave power to compel the attendance of the Mayor at any particular moment, but he was none the less excommunicated, and the excommunication was affixed to the market cross. The Mayor being 'a very simple man,' 'desiring rather to live in peace with his wrong than to seek his remedy,' submitted, did penance at the Austin Friars' Church, and was further humbled by being required to sign a submission, a notarial instrument narrating the circumstances of the case, and the tenor of the submission was hung up in the Schools[1]. It is only the price of this notarial instrument which the Grace Book records.

Slegge's case.

In 1528–9 the writing of letters significatory is entered (pp. 151–2), no doubt in connexion with the Vice-Chancellor's excommunication of Edward Slegge, then Mayor, for refusing to answer to a charge of violating the privileges of the University[2]. He had refused to banish his serjeant, Thomas Slater, at the request of the Vice-Chancellor and proctors[3]. In 1532–3 (pp. 173–5) 'Tomson's matter' is repeatedly referred to as a source of expense, for it entailed journeys to London. This was no doubt the case of Edward Thomson, excommunicated by the Vice-Chancellor for suing one Richard Brashaw for debt in the Court of Common Pleas. It was not clear that the University had any warrant for either of these actions. The last in particular made the burgesses threaten 'that they been purposed rather to forsake the town and inhabit themselves elsewhere than thus to continue in bondage.'

Control of the market.

The town's count against the University was not limited to cases of excommunication. The payments in these accounts for a University 'clamor in foro' seem to show a new attempt at some control over the market. The same thing is hinted in the town's complaint of the treatment of an apprentice selling in the market. The occasion is represented in our accounts by a single entry, which names the cost of bringing and taking away the 'nervus, id est a payre of stokkes, pro animadversione famuli ballivi Hawisse' (p. 174). In the draft of articles of complaint, drawn up 11 July, 1533, the town represented that one John Vause, apprentice of Mr Bailly Howes, stood in the market to sell herrings, and merely cried 'away with it' as many others did. For this he was kept in the stocks by the Vice-Chancellor's order, from 3 o'clock to 8, Howes' damage being put at 20*s*. In the University's reply to the articles it was explained that the punishment was for lewd words seditiously spoken. The cry of 'away with it' was probably raised against fish or other wares exposed for sale by persons licensed only by the University authorities.

Cases of Jennings and Osborne.

In 1534 Jennings' case is frequently referred to (pp. 181–3). He was a bailiff who was said to have assaulted the proctors in a general fray described in Mere's diary[1], which was perhaps due to the same cause as the case of bailiff Osborne, who was accused of unjustly vexing privileged persons by taking away their wares exposed for sale by order of the Vice-Chancellor. The borough claim probably depended on the fact, that these wares were being sold by retail by persons who were not members of the Merchant Gild and therefore not licensed to sell.

The University had in 1533 passed a statute, which forbade any scholars or scholar's servants to buy victual of freemen[2], and required them to buy only from persons appointed by masters of colleges. This was tantamount to a proposal on the part of the University to set up a merchant gild of its own, as under the charter of 1523 the University of Oxford was doing[3]. The resistance at Cambridge caused the University to seek counsel from the under-sheriff (p. 194), and the sheriff and others were feasted by the University when bailiff Osborne was 'restored to the castle' (p. 194). It had been part of his offence, that he had refused the University the use of the toll-booth as a prison; the castle prison instead received him.

The causes of dispute were multiplying, and the town drafted articles of complaint; the expenses of fetching two lawyers to help in drafting the University's reply, and the cost of penning the articles for distribution among the doctors (p. 182), are named in these accounts (p. 176).

Excommunication renounced.

The bitter hostility against the Universities reached so dangerous a height in 1534, that, probably under Cromwell's guidance, both agreed to beat a retreat. At Cambridge, members of the University, as Mere, the bedell, relates, were suspicious of any loud noise, lest it be a sign that the country had risen to destroy the University. At Oxford, Wolsey's charter was withdrawn, and by both Universities the right to excommunicate in temporal causes was renounced (p. 183). The Oxford petitions against the University excommunications clearly show how important this renunciation was deemed; but of the circumstances that led to the removal of this particular rock of offence nothing seems to be known. Cromwell's good offices may be suspected, and the choice of this particular point for compromise does credit not only to the skill of Cromwell's diplomacy which may have selected it, but also perhaps to the better influences of a movement of general reform.

Sturbridge Fair.

The long-standing troubles touching University jurisdiction in Sturbridge Fair came to a head in 1534, the year of the disturbances above described. The knotty point in connexion with the fair had long been the question, what wares might be regarded in strictness as 'victual,' and thus brought under the Vice-Chancellor's oversight[1]. Fisher's award had distinguished between wares bought to sell again and wares bought for consumption by the purchaser[2]. The University desired a more liberal interpretation, and in stretching the terms of the award found its liberties imperilled by the 'improbity' of the townsmen. The Vice-Chancellor was sent to London (p. 184) to take action for the preservation of all existing liberties and if possible for their extension; this visit, with the accompanying presents to persons in high authority, cost, as these accounts record, the large sum of £54.

[1] Annals, I. 372.

[2] Dyer, Privileges, I. 97.

Probably this negociation resulted only in a warning letter from Cromwell to the burgesses[1]; for next year a fresh journey was undertaken in defence of the proctor's right to examine all packages[2] containing fish (p. 199). In 1536 a present of 10 marks was given to the Lord Chancellor Audley, and in 1537 there was another negociation with Cromwell, for the Mayor and bailiffs had contumaciously refused the accustomed oath to the Vice-Chancellor in the Black Assembly (pp. 207–8)[3]. At this time there was an expenditure of £33. 15*s.* 1*d.* for courtesies and payments to magnates. In 1538 the expense in defending the privileges is named (p. 217), but no details are given of the negociations that year, which resulted in the statement on the town accounts that 'all was lost[4].'

No account for the Fair.

The proctors' accounts, although they thus often confirm the details of the story of University and town relations as known from other sources, do not include an account of the fines levied by them in Sturbridge Fair. For instance the details set down in the town's articles of complaint of 1533[5], details which give some idea of the value of these profits, are not entered in these pages.

Two commercial regulations are named, which illustrate the nature of the University's interference with Cambridge trade; in 1534 (p. 183) it was ordered that village butchers might bring meat more than once a week, and in 1537 (p. 207) the cost is recorded of a night watch, kept by the proctors to prevent the carrying of candles out of the town[6]. In 1537 four 'cades' of candle which had been sent to London were brought back (p. 204), having been exported presumably without leave. Rules of this sort would in the ordinary course have been made by the town council in boroughs which enjoyed the control of the assize of candle and victual. In Cambridge, under Fisher's award, the borough had been suffered to recover the control of the leather trade for the payment of 3*s.* 4*d.* a year, and the payment of this sum is regularly entered on these accounts.

Some reforms in the management of the court leet were ordered by a statute of the University in 1541[1], and these are referred to in the accounts (p. 238). The state of the finances of the University led to the abolition of the annual banquet, which appears in the accounts 1536 to 1542, and instead of allowing the profits of the assizes of victual to be farmed by the taxor, the proctors were to superintend the collection of the profits in his stead.

The Reformation.

The first waves of the Protestant Reformation are felt in the accounts of the proctors in 1521 (pp. 90, 93), which record the expenses incurred by the doctors, who travelled to London to discuss, with Wolsey, proceedings to stop the dissemination of Luther's writings; at the end of the Easter term of 1521 a charge is entered for drink and expenses at the burning of Luther's books. The University's submission to Wolsey, following Oxford's example, which is generally supposed to indicate fear of coming changes, foreshadowed by the first monastic dissolutions, seems partly, as has already been pointed out, to have been due to hope for an extremely liberal royal charter. The proceedings in connexion with the royal divorce are not expressly mentioned in these pages, but the expenses of receiving royal letters (p. 155) probably allude to this matter. Dr Buckmaster seems not to have charged for his visit to Windsor undertaken in connexion with the divorce proceedings, perhaps because it had resulted in a gift from the King of twenty nobles[2].

The fees paid to Dr Capon and to Gibson the King's Serjeant in 1526 (p. 128) were due in connexion with the arrest of Dr Barnes, accused of heresy; the trial is not referred to by name in this Grace Book. In 1531 (p. 163) the price of faggots to burn books and of copying papers for the heresy trial of 'Sigar' are mentioned[3]. The allusion is to Sigar Nicholson, a stationer, who was charged with having in his house the works of Luther, with other prohibited books. The Grace Book names also the fee of the University bedell who watched him, while in prison, at the time of his examination. In 1534 in spite of this trial Nicholson was chosen one of the three University stationers and printers officially appointed under a new royal privilege[4].

Nicholson had been one of the frequenters of the White Horse, and his friends Rodolph Bradford, Dr Smith of Trinity Hall, Simon Smith of Gonville Hall, and Hugh Latimer were all ordered to be arrested. Their names are of frequent occurrence in these pages, but there is no allusion to their trial.

The cost of writing a certain paper 'on the power of the Roman pontiff' is noted (p. 181); by that instrument it was declared that the Pope had not greater authority or jurisdiction than any other foreign bishop, 1 May, 1534. The result of this declaration was to make it needful, that the papal privileges of the University should be secured by a grant from the King as the Supreme Head of the Church of England, and the cost of arranging the negociations for this confirmation is entered 1535–6 (p. 197) and 1536–7 (p. 208).

The goodwill of Thomas Cromwell had been sought in 1533–4 by a payment of a stipend of £2 a year for life (p. 184). The cost of the letter in which this annuity was offered is named (p. 183) and this was probably the letter concerning which it is stated that the Vice-Chancellor sent it back from London to be re-drafted. In 1535 the office of Steward of the University was conferred on Cromwell (p. 190), and he received the usual stipend of £4 a year (p. 210, etc.). His appointment as Chancellor is not named here.

Subsidies and First-fruits.

The exemptions of the privileged persons in respect of taxation were a frequent source of small expenses, as the charters had to be taken up for inspection (p. 11), and steps had to be taken to secure the privilege on each occasion (p. 174). First-fruits and tenths were in the first instance asked for by the King (1534–5, p. 194) and unsuccessfully resisted, but eventually the point was yielded and a charter of exemption was granted (1536–7, p. 208[1]); but there were still some fees required in this connexion (p. 233, see also p. 214).

The exemption of scholars from 'musters' did not prevent the Duke of Norfolk (as Steward) from raising a University contingent in 1544; £13. 18*s*. was collected from the colleges, and £2. 13*s*. 10*d*. received for coat and conduct money (p. 247[2]).

University Library.

Although the frequent references to the University Library consist mainly of charges for repairs, there is also an occasional entry of the books borrowed, or of benefactions received. Thus the loan of a St Chrysostom on the Epistles to the Corinthians and that of an Alexander Hales on Metaphysics appear (p. 27), because cautions were received in return. Graces to enter the Library are recorded here (pp. 87, 118), and there is a mention of books received from Dr Morley, a monk (p. 56), and from Tunstall, Bishop of London 1528–9 (p. 149). Eighteen of the books given by Tunstall are still in the University Library; of these twelve are Greek books[1]. The gifts of Dr Morley have not been traced.

[1] See Mullinger, II. 12, for details of the incidence of this burden.

[2] See the account for 1542, Sept., in Cooper, Annals, I. 404.

Stationers.

A book which had been stolen from the Library and restored was bound by the stationer 'Nicholas' at a cost of 2*s.* 4*d.* (p. 47). This stationer was almost certainly Nicholas Spierinck, a Netherlander, whose beautiful bindings are figured in Mr G. J. Gray's interesting book on the Earlier Cambridge Stationers and Bookbinders[2]. On p. 91 of the Grace Book, Spierinck is named as a surety, together with Garard, who was no doubt Garrett Godfrey, another Dutchman whose bookbindings are famous. A binding by 'Gerard' is named 1528–9 for the Cardinal's 'book,' which had cost 16*s.* 8*d.*, and was bound in velvet provided by Mr Cheke for 12*s.* Garrett Godfrey received 8*d.* for his work (p. 152). Perhaps the book was a copy of the University statutes or charters. Of Sigar Nicholson, the stationer, mention has been made above. Peter Bright, stationer, whose bindings are not known[3], is named on p. 44, an appeal having been brought against him, but on what ground we know not. Mr Gray has pointed out that the 'alien priest John Lair' (p. 224) was the printer Siberch.

Traces of statutory changes.

A few University regulations are entered in the present volume, and a few financial entries reflect statutory changes. For instance on p. 29 (1523–4) there is a note on the receipt of fees for the ordinary lectures, of the payment of the lecturers in Terence and philosophy, and the funding of the surplus in the chest, 'the sixth part being deducted.' This was in accordance with the statute[4] of 1513, which allowed the proctors to make this deduction by way of stimulating their activity in collecting the fees.

The sale of graces had been reduced by the statute of 1517 to a fixed tariff, though 'freewill offerings' were not discouraged. In 1523 it was ordered, that all religious[5] 'having property' should pay £6. 13*s.* 4*d.* on taking the doctor's degree, and should not be required to provide an entertainment; those without property (i.e. of the mendicant orders) should give £5. 6*s.* 8*d.*, but not give an entertainment. In that year the 'judges of the University' reduced the fee to a monk, who had already given the banquet, to the friars' rate of £5. 6*s.* 8*d.* (p. 106).

Three graces of 18 Jan., 1528, are by way of exception entered in this volume (p. 139). The first refers to the allowance of the expenses of those who, in the name of the University and the judges elected by the University, in 1527, treated the cause of dispute with the Cardinal and other magnates against Dr Nateres. Elsewhere (p. 142) a 'lis inter magistratus,' a 'lis inter academiam et magistratus' (p. 145) is referred to, and this may be the matter in question. The name of Dr Nateres is celebrated in connexion with the Barnes heresy case of 1526; for it was Nateres who, as Vice-Chancellor, initiated proceedings against Barnes. In 1526–7 Nateres was again Vice-Chancellor, but what the nature of the dispute was in which he now found himself involved seems to be unknown. Possibly the dispute was in connexion with the grace which follows in our text (p. 139) making a change in the order of the responsions for the master's degree and the bachelor's payments. The disputations which had been made on Fridays in grammar were henceforth to be made in philosophy; the responsions would suffice for the master's degree, and bachelors would not have to pay the officers for such responsions: perhaps the masters in grammar had reason to resent this change and to bring it to the notice of Wolsey. There had been no inceptors in grammar in 1518—1525, but in 1526—1529 they reappear.

The cause of expenses incurred betwixt the Bishop of Ely and the University, 1529, on account of the violation of the privileges of the University (p. 152), was the excommunication of a member of the University by the Bishop's chancellor, Dr Clyffe. Wolsey decided the dispute in favour of the University[1].

The movement towards endowed lectureships, already seen in progress in the earlier part of the Grace Book, was gathering force, and the payment of salaries to lecturers becomes in this part an important item of the accounts. The names of the mathematical lecturers receiving payment from the University are given in many, but not in all, cases. The early holders of the office were Bullock, Walkden, then Collingwood and Pindar, and later Philips (p. 69), King, Kingston, Blythe, Rode, Pannell, More, Roger Ascham, Lecturers.

[1] Annals, I. 327.

Young, Barker. Sometimes the names of lecturers are given but their subjects are not described. In 1520 Shaftow, Stringer, and Bryan were paid (p. 76), Bryan being no doubt Erasmus' pupil, whose zeal for Greek drew attention to him[1]. Croke's stipend as Greek reader[2] is not mentioned in the Grace Book; he appears first as Orator in 1521–2 (p. 101). The proceedings in connexion with Sir Robert Rede's foundations of three ordinary lectureships in Terence (i.e. humanity), Logic, and Philosophy, are more than once alluded to; in 1522 a scholar of St John's was paid for copying indentures of this trust (p. 102), and the statutes exonerating scholars from payment for the ordinary lectures are named in 1524 (p. 114).

Many of the lecturers were also employed as writers for the University, for instance Collingwood, Stringer, and Ascham, also Haynes and Day, who in 1528 became Public Orator, in succession to Croke. Dr Redman, who held office as Orator for a brief space in 1537, is not entered; Thomas Smith succeeds to Day in these accounts in 1538, and Cheke follows him in 1542 (p. 238)[3]. The reception of the edict of Gardiner, then Chancellor, on the abrogation of the 'pronunciation' (i.e. the new pronunciation) of Greek and Latin is named (p. 239). The stipends of the Regius Professors and of the three ordinary lecturers on Sir Robert Rede's foundation, not being paid by the University, do not appear on these accounts.

The 'rejecti.'

In two of the tables of degrees there appears among the group of determinants a group of 'rejecti'; in 1527–8 there were seven, called on p. 147 'rejecti baccalarii in artibus,' and in 1528–9 there were three (p. 150). None of these proceeded to the degree of M.A., and the rejection may possibly have taken place through a failure to accomplish duly the 'opposing' and 'responding' required of an inceptor. It would seem that they had determined, and were B.A.'s, perhaps by payment. On p. 189 a 'dominus' pays 13*s.* 4*d.* 'quoniam non determinavit cum effectu.' Possibly the heading 'rejecti' ought to have been inserted in some of the other lists, where (as on p. 214) a space divides two groups of determinants. Possibly the group of 'rejecti' of 1528 should be connected with the masters' dispute with Nateres in the preceding year, of which mention has been made above.

The Cambridge 'legislatores,' as those who took the law degrees were beginning to be called, are not to be found upon the rolls of the Inns of Court which have been published for this period. The University trained for a different career, and the reward of the successful Cambridge doctor of civil law, after canon law had been removed from the schools, remained, what it had been before, an ecclesiastical benefice or office, not a seat on the judicial Bench. Occasionally a few law scholars were admitted to practice in court (the ecclesiastical court) as on pp. 77–8; Professor Clark[1] has pointed out that they were probably licentiates, not taking the full degree on account of the expense, but qualified therefor. An Act of Parliament of 1545, 'that the doctors of civil law may exercise ecclesiastical jurisdiction[2],' gave to doctors of civil law of either University, who have been ordained or deputed Chancellor, Vicar-General, Commissary, Official, Scribe, Register, by the King or other authorized person, power to exercise ecclesiastical jurisdiction; and this list of officers shows what became of most of the doctors of civil law.

Cambridge law degrees.

The incorporation of students from foreign universities had ceased to be a common event[3], but the incorporation of Oxford students was frequent. The friendly relations of the two Universities are shown by two entries which record the expense of a journey to Oxford, to find out how the King's commissioners were numbering the students there, no doubt in connexion with the subsidy of 1522. The Warden of New College received wine and pears for his civility (p. 102). In 1532–3 the sum of 6*s.* 8*d.* was spent in feasting guests from Oxford and those who publicly disputed with them (p. 174). Fuller in his history of the University has given an amusing account of the visit of the two Oxford men, Throgmorton and Ashwell, 'having much learning in their heads, but needing to have brought more in their Portmantues,' as the arguments of their five opponents showed. The reference to a 'Bocardo,' which was a necessary outhouse (p. 50), throws a new light on the meaning of the phrase 'to set Duns in Bocardo.'

Negociations with Oxford.

At the end of John Ostaby's term of office as a detailed annual account of the Barrow trust ceases, we depend mainly on the entries concerning the chaplain's salary of 40*s.* for information concerning this office. Dr Stokes has shown[1] that the University chaplain was generally clerk of the schools, bearer of the cross, and also librarian[2]. Mr Leathes (Grace Book A, p. xxxviii) has pointed out that the librarian's salary was 40*s.* from the schools of canon law. Ostaby's salary of 40*s.* is mentioned on p. 26, but it is often omitted; on p. 27, however, his receipt of a caution for a borrowed book shows that he was librarian. Latimer seems to have succeeded Ostaby, for he was paid for expenditure on the schools (1521–2), and was in all likelihood the clerk of the schools who was paid for bearing the University cross (p. 109). He first began to receive a salary of 40*s.* in 1524–5 (p. 124), and was paid this sum till 1527–8, possibly as librarian. The next entry of a chaplain's salary is that concerning Nicholas Heath, 1530–2, who received 40*s.* from the canon law chair. Nicholas Ridley succeeded him in 1533, but after 1535 no further entries are made in this volume. The chaplain's salary is generally followed by the salaries of two bedells, 6*s.* 8*d.* to one from the civil law chair, and to the other from the canon law chair; after the abolition of the canon law one of the bedells was called bedell in arts (pp. 226, 232). The occasional introduction of a Chancellor's bedell and the names of other bedells makes the succession in the office difficult to trace. George Nicholls or Nicholson whose fee of 20*s.* is regularly entered seems to have been University counsel.

The following is a list of the proctors who held office during this period:—

1511–2. George Thomson and Christopher Duckett.
1512–3. Richard Stanbank and William Chandeler.
1513–4. Roger Collingwood and Richard Master.
1514–5. Richard Norris and Thomas Martin.
1515–6. John Cutting and Thomas Goodrich.
1516–7. Rowland Bolleron and Reginald Bainbridge.
1517–8. John Copinger and Gilbert Latham.
1518–9. John Cox and Roger Ash.

1534–5. Henry Malett and John Madew.
1535–6. Ralph Ainsworth and William Saunders.
1536–7. Henry Joliffe and Robert Stocks.
1537–8. Richard Standish and Thomas Cobb.
1538–9. Godfrey Gilpin and Henry Saunderson.
1539–40. Oliver Ainsworth and Alban Langdale.
1540–1. Henry Pullay and — Humfrey.
1541–2. Henry Bisell and Thomas West.
1542–3. Simon Brigges and Edwin Sandys.
1543–4. Henry Cumberforthe and — Wakeling.

The hostels named in these pages have all appeared in earlier volumes of the Grace Books.

The spelling of names is more irregular than hitherto, and the transformations of the names entered year by year in the list of 'desperate debts' are very curious. The crier Leodegarius, Legerd, Letchet, appears in many forms, so also Hamond Grave, a proctor of 1482–3 whose debts were irrecoverable. The scribe writes often t for c, and e for o, as 'cereis' for coreis, 'delphin' for Dolphin (the inn).

The volume which contains details of the lives of Erasmus' Cambridge correspondents and of the Cambridge reformers has an interest of its own. It closes fitly with Parker's purchase of a new account-book and the beginning of the term of Mere's tenure of office as registrary.

The text of the present volume has been prepared by Mr Rogers and Mr Bickley. Continuing the practice of former volumes, the index has been drawn up in the form of a series of academic biographies, so far as the text offers material for this. To assist in the identifications, Cooper's Athenae and Dr Venn's Biographies have been used where possible, and Christian names and Colleges have been supplied in square brackets from these sources. Grace Book Γ is however the source from which many more details could be supplied, and when published it must prove that the present index stands in need of much correction. For several reasons it has however seemed advisable to complete the publication of Grace Book B as an independent record, leaving the closely related Grace Book Γ to follow in due course. I owe thanks for kind assistance and correction to Mr W. G. Searle and Dr Stokes.
